DETAILED ACTION

Election/Restrictions

1. Applicant's election without traverse of Group II in the reply filed on 10/7/04 is acknowledged.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

2. Claims 7-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.
3. Claims 7-16 are confusing in that it is not clear what is encompassed by the use of "a vegetable-fruit product". Does this mean that a fruit or vegetable is being processed? Does this mean that the product must be a fruit and vegetable mixture?

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

4. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.
5. Claims 7-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Japan 52-136942 (Abstract; see instant specification description of same as well, page 1) taken together with either one of U.S. Patent No. 3637081 or U.S. Patent No. 3654148.

Japan 52-136942 discloses a method for concentrating tomato juice (considered a vegetable-fruit product as called for in the instant claims and inherently containing seeds as called for) by passing same through a reverse osmosis unit with a plurality of tubular membrane modules connected together by a single-stage single-pass method. The claims differ in that the tomato material is provided to the reverse osmosis unit under pressure and that said juice is transferred to and from the reverse osmosis unit using a single-axis screw pump attached to the inlet and one attached to the outlet. Either one of U.S. Patent No. 3637081 or U.S. Patent No. 3654148 (both Bradley) teach treatment of a liquid material using a reverse osmosis unit wherein the liquid material is pumped under pressure to the unit and transferred to and from the concentrating unit using respective single access screw conveyor pumps. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to have included same to facilitate better power usage (as contemplated in U.S. Patent No. 3654148, col. 4, lines 51-71).

The instant claims further call for the amount of solid component in the vegetable-fruit product and the pressure difference between the inlet and outlet of the reverse osmosis unit as well as the respective pressures involved at the inlet and outlet. However, it is not seen where the particular amount of solid component in the vegetable-fruit product would provide for a patentable distinction, and it would have been further obvious to have arrived at such value as a matter of preference. As for the pressures involved, such determination would have been well within the purview of a skilled artisan, and, absent a showing of unexpected results, it would have been further obvious to have arrived at such values through experimental optimization.

Conclusion
